9:00 -10:30 OPENING KEYNOTE

The Political Economy of Communications Networks

By Telekommunisten (Dmytri Kleiner and Baruch Gottlieb)

This keynote lecture consists of two parts and will address political economy of communications technology in general and the Internet in particular. In the first part, Dmytri Kleiner will present a brief history of the Internet and explain how it was initially a not-for-profit distributed network, and that as commercialization began, so did centralization, and how far from being an unintended consequence, surveillance and control is core part of the design of the modern Internet, not as a result of zealous Government espionage, but of capitalist business models based on the selling and grading of audience commodity. In the second part, Baruch Gottlieb focuses on the materiality of the Internet, which, often understood as immaterial in the imagination of rich western countries, needs minerals, real estate, energy and labour to function. He challenges the alleged emancipatory potential of the new media by drawing attention to the unfree nature of labour in the factories and mines that produce the essential materials for essential hardware, and argues that without such unfree labour, this technology would not exist.

Biography

Dmytri Kleiner is a software developer and the author of The Telekommunist Manifesto. Dmytri is a contributing artist to the Miscommunication Technologies continuing series of artworks by Telekommunisten, such as deadSwap, Thimbl, R15N and OCTO. Miscommunication Technologies address the social relations embedded in communications platforms by bringing aspects which are normally hidden from view to the foreground to be critically experienced and confronted. In The Telekommunist Manifesto, Kleiner has published the Peer-Production licence, a commons-friendly license the author has described as CopyFarLeft, and proposed Venture Communism, a mode of worker-controlled production modelled on peer networks and the pastoral commons. He can be followed at <http://dmytri.info> and on Twitter as @dmytri

(Dr. phil.) Baruch Gottlieb trained as a filmmaker at Concordia University, has been working in digital art with specialization in public art and performance. He is currently Artist-researcher in Residence at the Institute for Time-based Media, lecturer in philosophy of digital art and aesthetics at the University of Arts Berlin and fellow of the Vilém Flusser Archiv. He is also curator of the upcoming exhibition series "Flusser & the Arts" based on the philosophical writings of Vilém Flusser. Gottlieb is active member of Telekommunisten ,Arts & Economics Group and Laboratoire Deberlinisation. His first book "Gratitude for Technology" (Atropos 2009) elaborates an anthropomorphics of digital technology. His upcoming book "A Political Economy of the Smallest Things" (Atropos 2015) proposes labour models for industrial production at the sub-atomic scale. He tweets as @baruch

You will be provided with Internet vouchers

Meals

Coffee and refreshments are included on all days. These will be served outside the Auditorium.

Lunch during the whole conference (including workshop days) will be served in INCUBA Science Park, Aabogade 15, 8200 Aarhus N (a few minutes walk from the conference venue).

Open table food will be served on Wednesday evening outside the auditorium, in conjunction with the Demos and other entertainment.

You will also have the possibility to buy drinks from the so-called "Friday bar".

The conference dinner will take place on Thursday evening and includes a welcome drink and a three-course menu with wine. There will also be some finger food served for those partying at the venue after the dinner is over.

Transportation

Buses

→ From downtown Aarhus to the conference venue

Take bus 2A – direction 'Skejby Sygehus'.

Your stop is 'Paludan-Müllers Vej/Finlandsgade'. It is right next to the shopping centre Storcenter Nord. The bus departs several times every hour. It takes around 20 minutes to get to your destination.

→ From workshop venue to downtown Aarhus

Bus 2A – direction 'Holme'.

Timetables

Timetables and general information about buses can be found at:
<https://www.midttrafik.dk/in-english.aspx>

Tickets and prices

The bus fare costs 20 DKK for a two-zone ticket. Buy the ticket in a machine (pay with Danish coins) in the bus and choose an adult two-zone ticket. Tickets are valid two hours onward from the time of purchase during daytime.

You can also buy a two-zone multi-ride ticket (in Danish "klippekort") at newsstands and at the bus station.

Another option is to buy the AarhusCard valid for 24 or 48 hours. With this you can travel as you please within zone 1 and 2 on city buses and regional buses. Furthermore you get discounts on the entrance for museums/attractions and for cafés, restaurants and much more. Buy the AarhusCard at your hotel or at the bus station.

Citybikes

From April until November you can use any one of the 450 city bikes in Aarhus free of charge 24 hours a day. You can find them around the city in the 57 specially allocated bicycle stands. You can reach most of Aarhus' attractions by bike and the city has created many cycling paths to ensure a pleasant ride.

To borrow a bike, insert a 20-kroner coin in the slot and press the "key" into the slot to unlock the lock and release the bike from the bicycle stand. You get your 20-kroner coin back again when you press the "key" back into the slot at any bicycle stand.

Taxi

Taxi is rather expensive in Denmark. Therefore, we always advise our guests to choose public transport instead.
